

Touching Base to Keep Members Connected and on Track (3 of 3)

Lee Gault, Montana Conservation Corps (Bozeman, MT)

Lee: Our communication is very much restricted by the fact that people are way back in the wilderness. And our main form of communication is written where every couple of weeks they do a biweekly journal where they have daily entries about their project work, what's going on with their members, and any other comments about safety, risk management incidents, the education they're covering. And that really is our one and only form of communication during most of the season when our crews are out in the woods doing their work.
